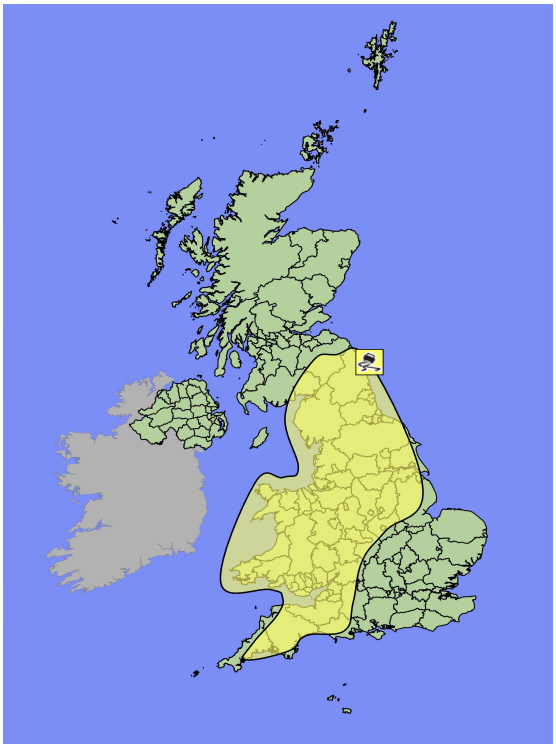
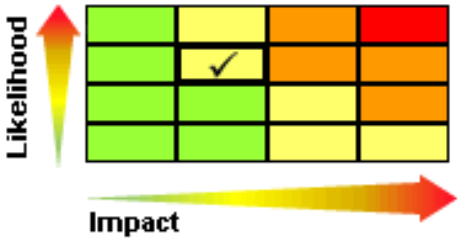
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Showers in a cold air mass, some wintry, especially in the north, will be followed by drier conditions as a ridge of high pressure pushes in from the northwest. Light winds and clear skies will allow temperatures to fall rapidly, before roads have had a chance to dry, bringing the likelihood of ice, especially on untreated surfaces.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 17:00 on Fri, 27th Jan 2012 until 10:00 on Sat, 28th Jan 2012

An area of showers will clear southeastwards on Friday afternoon and evening, clearing skies allowing a widespread frost to form. This will lead to a risk of ice on roads though into Saturday morning. The public are advised to be aware of potentially hazardous driving conditions and the risk of disruption to transport.
